Chamber Adopts 2015 Strategic Initiatives

Every year, the Redondo Beach Chamber of Commerce’s Government Relations Council passes annual Strategic Initiatives. These are the legislative and policy issues that the GRC members have identified as the most pressing issues facing the local business community, and these are the issues that the chamber will work on proactively for their members.

FOR 2015, THE STRATEGIC INITIATIVES ARE AS FOLLOWS:

1. Revitalization of Commercial Corridors
   The Redondo Beach Chamber of Commerce will support efforts to improve our commercial corridors and promote building a strong local economy. We will help with the revitalization of our waterfront by supporting the efforts of CenterCal to update and improve the Pier. The Chamber backs the efforts of Measure B to rezone the AES property to a mixed use property and the decommissioning of the power plant. The Chamber will also work to champion efforts that will lead to responsible developments to the Galleria, Riviera Village, and Artesia Corridor that help enhance and beautify our commercial retain hubs in the city. We will advocate for the overhaul of the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) to improve land use development projects in Redondo Beach.

2. Aerospace
   The Redondo Beach Chamber will work to support legislation that ensure keeping aerospace jobs in the South Bay. We will continue to be a champion for the Los Angeles Air Force Base and fight to keep the base off the Base Relocation and Closure (BRAC) list. The Chamber will fight to make sure the spending cuts through sequestration do not have negative impacts on our local aerospace companies such as Northrop Grumman that work to fulfill national defense contracts.

3. Support Local Small Business
   The Redondo Beach Chamber of Commerce will work with city hall to ensure that Redondo Beach has the friendliest business climate possible. We will advocate for public policies that help small business thrive, grow and flourish, and will actively oppose public policies that is overly burdensome.

Chamber Focuses on the Importance of the Los Angeles Air Force Base

The importance of the Los Angeles Air Force Base (LAAFB) to the South Bay economy is raised each time the Pentagon and Congress determine it’s time to cut back on defense spending for one reason or another. Today, with the automatic spending cuts authorized through sequestration coupled with a new focus on reducing “wasteful spending”. The South Bay, once again, needs to prepare for another potential round of base closures.

The importance of the Los Angeles Air Force Base goes far beyond its value to the region’s economy. The role that the base plays in today’s national defense with intelligence gathering worldwide is second to none. It’s a critical infrastructure asset that needs to remain in El Segundo.

The LAAFB’s other critical asset is its brain-trust of almost 5,900 military, civilian and contractor workers. Most of these employees went to Southern California universities and live in the South Bay. Moving the base anywhere outside of its current location would most certainly jeopardize the institutional memory that has built up over the years since most current employees would simply not want to leave their South Bay community. There are numerous examples of aerospace firms relocating facilities outside California only to find a small fraction of their employees wanting to follow the move. If this would happen by the LAAFB moving, it could cripple its critical capabilities.

Finally, any effort to move the LAAFB would impact the existing base of prime contractors such as Northrop Grumman, Boeing, Raytheon, Honeywell, and others such as the Aerospace Corporation that has a longstanding physical connection to the base and the national defense programs they support.

If the time comes to mobilize in support of the LAAFB, the Redondo Beach Chamber will be there as always in partnership with the South Bay Association of Chambers of Commerce (SBACC). That time may just be now.

Unfair competition is an illegal practice where a business attempts to gain unfair competitive advantage by committing false, fraudulent, deceitful, and/or unethical actions. Unfair competition in a business setting is usually grounds for a tort action that could be brought by a plaintiff that has suffered economic injury or harm to their business or organization as a result of the unjust and deceptive business practice of the defendant.

1) What Is Unfair? An unfair business practice is a conduct that is meant to deceive or tricks other consumers or competitors that gives the defendant an illegal and unfair advantage.

2) What Is Unlawful? An unlawful business practice is any conduct that violates any law, statute, or regulation that is provided under the Business and Professional Code Sections. The unlawful violation can be under a federal regulation or a local city ordinance.

3) What Is Fraudulent? Fraudulent conduct is any act or conduct that involves misrepresentation of fact or any deceitful conduct that causes actual reliance by another which results in damages.

If a court determines that a business is committing activity that involves unfair competition, it will prohibit that conduct and may award money damages to the plaintiff for the harm incurred.

Antitrust and unfair competition law is a very complex area of the law. An experienced business lawyer can help guide you through the legal process and make sure all of your rights are protected. An experience business attorney can also assist you to prevent you from engaging in any unlawful business practices that would be unlawful under the unfair competition laws.

Leadership Redondo Class of 2014 project moving forward!

Parsons Project for Kids approved by City Council

On February 17th, Redondo Beach City Council unanimously approved the proposed concept, location and budget for the Leadership Redondo Class of 2014 project, The Parsons Project for Kids. The Class Project will honor the late John Parsons by updating the children’s areas in both the Main Library and North Branch of the Redondo Beach Public Library to create a warm, comfortable and inviting place for children to explore and enjoy the magical world of reading.

“It’s an incredible project and something the members of your class can be proud of, and do within budget,” said Mayor Steve Aspel.

The project will include painted murals to grace the walls of each location, wake up our children’s imagination and lead them into a world of fantasy, a prominent display honoring the late John Parsons, re-upholstering chairs in the Children’s section at the Main Branch, purchasing rugs, educational toys and comfortable seating to “soften” children’s reading areas for both locations, and the purchase of computers pre-loaded with educational programs for children bringing our libraries into the digital age.

John was a pillar of our community as a founder of Leadership Redondo Beach, supporter of public arts and Library Foundation member, Rotarian, two-term Councilman, Air Force Base advocate, wonderful husband and inspiring father. “I get a little teary eyed, he’s a great man,” said Mayor Aspel. “That’ll be a good thing… but you’re going to need a bigger wall.”

The Leadership Class of 2014 is currently seeking donations to help raise funds needed to complete the project. Contributions towards the community project are tax deductible as allowed by law.

More information can be found online at www.parsonsprojectforkids.com or you may email the class at ParsonsProjectForKids@gmail.com.

Chamber Leaders Attend LAEDC Conference

The New Marketplace, a Customizable Experience

There is a lot to be learned from the practices of modern business innovators, and the growth of the ‘share-economy’. Several of us attended the recent Los Angeles County Economic Development Corporation (LAEDC) meeting, where two presenters, Air BnB and Lyft, are in the forefront of this new era. While these new, social companies may seem like challengers to the established marketplace, their work to engage their customer base illuminates a unique, new trend in consumer demand, the boutique experience.

In the past twenty years, a large share of the American economic growth has been through chains and big-box stores; shaped on a single strategy, to create a product or ambiance that can then be recreated in new locations. The focus was to generate a repeatable experience to customers, losing regional differences or global customs (i.e. a TGI Fridays in London is just like a TGI Fridays in LA).

However, consumer demand is changing in response to this business plan.

The new marketplace, coming out of the digital age, is driven by customizable experiences. Consumers want experiences that reinforce their lifestyle and work into the way they have chosen to interact with the world. To restate this a different way, think about your own social media and online presence. Much of your online world is the result of choices you have made to access messages and interactions that are most engaging to you. On a larger scale, the new market place works in the same way. We are rapidly moving to a world where everyone curates the lifestyle they lead and want their interactions to reinforce those choices. New companies working in the digital sphere were the first to take advantage of this movement.

That is not to say that only tech-forward and hip companies can tap into this market. From mom-and-pop stores to brand managers, companies looking to engage clients should be asking themselves what they can offer that gives a personalized feel to the experience and how they can stay in line with their standards while appealing to a base that wants less of a division between proprietor and client.

That’s a word that fits the government agency vocabulary the way “confluence” fits meteorology. We’re in compliance when we comply and that usually has something to do with regulations. And no one does regulation better than government agencies.

One of the services many IT firms provide is stated simply, compliance. The nature of your business determines the type of compliance that’s required. Most businesses have some sort of compliance requirement. Many have more than one.

We recently did a security analysis for a medical practice. If you aren’t in the medical field, consider yourself lucky. They need to comply with the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA).

HIPAA compliance is a maze of locked doors and hidden passageways with very few clues about how to reach the end, assuming there is an end, which there really isn’t. Fortunately, there’s a handy 45 page guide to the federal government’s requirements on privacy and security. Good luck finding the answers you need in that hypnotic publication.

Many business owners assume someone else in their field of vision is taking care of compliance. Maybe your Internet or phone company handles security for the services they provide. Maybe your credit card processor handles compliance issues for your card transactions. And…maybe not. If you accept credit cards, it’s a near certainty you need to comply with the Payment Card Industry Data Security Standard (PCI DSS), commonly referred to as PCI compliance.

In some rare and wonderful instances, an industry does such a good job regulating and policing itself, the government just lets them do it without interference. That seems to be the case with PCI compliance. A non-government organization called PCI Security Standards Council (https://www.pcisecuritystandards.org/) sets and administers standards that apply to merchant credit card security.

Non-government does not equate to non-complicated although their web site is pretty easy to navigate. It won’t take much time on their site to determine whether your business needs PCI compliance. Merchant classifications differ based on the types of credit cards accepted and whether the business is ecommerce or brick and mortar. Most small businesses fall into the Level 4 category.

As a Level 4 merchant you are probably required to perform an annual self-assessed questionnaire and quarterly scans of any public network that enables credit card transactions.

Perhaps the one single piece of PCI compliance advice that’s most useful to small businesses is to avoid storing credit card numbers on any of your computers or serv-

Vaccinate

Dr. Lisa Santora, BCHD
Chief Medical Officer

The outbreak of measles earlier this year at Disneyland has people talking. Unfortunately, a lot of the talk is misinformed and sensationalized. Measles, like all vaccine-preventable diseases, is a serious illness that can cause significant harm. Many of us have never experienced measles and, therefore, underestimate the risk of not vaccinating a child.

Our world is flat, especially when it comes to disease. The current measles outbreak actually started in the Philippines two years ago, before traveling to the U.S. When people infected with contagious diseases travel (remember, you can be infected and asymptomatic) and come into contact with non-vaccinated or under-vaccinated individuals, we are all put at risk. Vaccines aren’t 100% effective, so we also depend on proper hygiene, herd immunity and herd effect to reduce the transmission of contagious diseases.

Luckily, we have near record low levels of vaccine-preventable childhood diseases in the United States – a true testament to the success of modern vaccines. But viruses and bacteria still manage to circulate in our country or lurk just a plane ride away. During the past decade, we have also seen a concerning increase in personal belief exemptions from vaccines among school-aged children in the beach cities. And we’re now experiencing the consequences – outbreaks of serious, vaccine-preventable childhood diseases.

On the same day as the U.S. measles outbreak, the Kaiser Permanent Vaccine Research Center published findings from its 12-year study on the measles, mumps, and rubella vaccine (MMR), and the findings confirmed its overall safety. What’s more, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) warns that we cannot take high immunization coverage levels for granted. To continue to protect America’s children and adults, we must obtain maximum immunization coverage in all populations.

Beach Cities Health District has partnered with Kaiser Permanente, Providence Little Company of Mary Medical Centers and Torrance Memorial to increase awareness about the safety and effectiveness of vaccinations, and to urge parents to vaccinate their children against preventable diseases like measles.

Parents can learn more about the benefits and safety of vaccinations by visiting bchd.org.

ers. If you do, you will have to meet a higher standard of data security. At very least, you will need to encrypt data going into and out of all computers and servers on your network. That can get complicated.

In most cases, government and non-government agencies that want you to come into some form of compliance will let you know. Be warned. Just like the law, ignorance of requirements is not a defense if you fail to meet compliance regulations.

You should contact government agencies that regulate your type of business, your credit card processor and your insurance company to get a clear picture of any compliance issues you may face. The consequences for non-compliance can be severe. Compliance is a real world example of an ounce of prevention being worth many pounds of cure.
